TEACHING EXPERIENCE

Undergraduate Teaching:

Diversity, Oppression, and Social Justice – ecological and systems framework for understanding the dynamics of diversity and oppression; how oppression impacts thinking, interactions, and work with others; and strategies to create social justice and one's own role in promoting social justice

Research Design and Measurement - research ethics, experimental designs, quasi-experimental designs, qualitative methods, survey construction, interviewing, reporting findings, developing community partnerships, field research methods, and statistics.

Research in Social Work I – ethical and diversity issues in research, evidence-based practice, experimental designs, quasi-experimental designs, single case design, qualitative methods, sampling, survey research, interviewing, and program evaluation.

Graduate Teaching:

Qualitative Research in Social Work - This doctoral-level seminar is designed to introduce students to the principles, methods, and analytical techniques utilized when conducting qualitative research in social work and social welfare.

Research in Social Work I – ethical and diversity issues in research, evidence-based practice, experimental designs, quasi-experimental designs, single case design, qualitative methods, sampling, survey research, interviewing, and program evaluation.

Research in Social Work II - research ethics; review of experimental and quasi-experimental designs, critiquing research, evidence-based practice, univariate and bivariate statistics, and program evaluation.

Methods of Social Work Practice - systems ecological framework as the overarching framework for organizing and conceptualizing social work practice; social work practice and its commitment to oppressed and disenfranchised populations; and practice with individuals and families.

Group Theory and Practice - major group theories and concepts of human behavior and the fundamental knowledge and skill for generalist social work mezzo practice.
